Tower feeder

A new place for small birds to hang out

Just in time for the autumn, a new restaurant opens for all of the country's small birds. Freely hanging from a branch in the garden or on a balcony, the Tower Feeder invites the area's winged small guests to a delightful dinner, without disturbance from larger birds such as magpies and jackdaws. Equipped with three small, low holes and short perches the larger birds are unable to get at the food.

The tower feeder is manufactured out of solid wood and stained in five different nature-toned colours, which means that it blends into the natural environment of the animal life. Just as other feeders from Wildlife Garden, it is equipped with ventilation holes in the bottom so that the food is kept moisture-free and the small feed holes mean the food won't become soiled by the tiny guests.
