Protect your friends during the winter

Just in time for the autumn, Wildlife Garden is launching a new variant of the popular Multifeeder Barn. The classic red one has now been joined by a more rustic feeder with wood-only front that discreetly blends into your garden. The more neutral Multifeeder Barn may feel more like "home" in places where red ochre does not necessarily fit in.

The bird feeder accommodates up to four different types of bird food, everything from seed to tallow balls and nuts, or why not lay out some delicious insect cakes. The food is well protected from rain and foul weather and, thanks to the design; it is difficult for the larger birds to get to the food. The right menu can turn this buffet restaurant into a real bird magnet. Assemble the feeder on a post or on a swing lever outside your window. Fill it with food by lifting the roof, but you will not need to do this all that often as the feeder accommodates a great deal of food. Cleaning it is just as easy, and since all droppings end up falling directly on the ground, this avoids the spread of infection between the guests.
